“ Steve is my nephew. We had a special bond, because at the time he was my only nephew. I called him my "favorite". He was quiet but always had a sense of humor. A fun kid and Sweet. I am so proud of the man he became and the love he had for his family. He helped raise a very talented, great athlete, smart, not to mention a very handsome young man. I know that Steve was very proud of his family. We are praying for comfort and peace for his family. Aunt B and John. 🙏❤️

“ Cherished childhood memories and photos with my little brother...

As a little boy I remember Steve as being happy, sensitive, and very shy (often hiding behind Mom's leg until he was sure you weren't the boogieman).

His innocent smile and shy tendencies melted all the ladies hearts.

As he grew out of his shyness the silly's took over. Steve was especially silly when we were with our cousins.

As soon as the grownups were out of sight, Steve would do the craziest things to make us laugh. The facial expressions, the funny poses and sound effects were hilarious. The more we laughed the funnier he got. This went on for years. And everytime the adults would come in and yell at us for being unruly, they never believed that little Stevie was the instigator. My little brother could do know wrong.

It was important to Steve that everyone was having fun. And If you were sad he tried to cheer you up.

Do any of these traits exist or sound similar in the adult Steve? It seems our character doesn't change all that much through life. He was always making us laugh, cheering us up or on some occasions teasing the heck out of someone for no apparent reason.

*Until we meet again little brother,
All my love,
Annette*

“ Steve was always the center of the room. He had us all hanging on every story and joke he told. I can still hear his laugh and will never forget it. I'll be front!
